distribution of doses received by patients undergoing digital fluoroscopy examinations to give a more consistent and readily understandable indication of patient dose-detection of clear issues relating to dose, such as frequency distributions of dose, body mass indices, effective energy, and timing of the exposure. The median patient dose for 91 examinations (20 interventional cardiology, 71 interventional neuroradiology, and 20 interventional sonography) performed in a period from April 1996 to March 2001 was 397 mrem for interventional cardiology, 4020 mrem for interventional neuroradiology, and 5430 mrem for interventional sonography. In addition, the frequency distributions of the patient dose for 98 examinations (34 interventional cardiology, 29 interventional neuroradiology, and 37 interventional sonography) performed in a period from October 2006 to March 2008 were computed, and it was found that the frequency distribution of patient dose was no longer normally distributed, and showed the characteristic of a multimodal distribution. The area under the frequency distribution (100-Dose), which is the equivalent of the area under the dose-response curve, was a useful index for comparing the median patient dose of different procedures. The area under the frequency distribution may be a useful parameter for describing patients' dose profiles. Welcome to my parenting expat rants. I'm a Catholic, a former school teacher, a homeschooling mother of 3, and a work at home wife! I have a lot of opinions, so I decided to share them. Monday, August 30, 2006 I Smell a Rat! Oh, my! After being at this website for awhile, I thought I knew everything there was to
