My friend Jason has been using Photoshop for many years to edit his family photos, but I've found it to be a challenge to move away from Adobe Photoshop and use a graphics editor. For example, when creating, editing or publishing a photo, he faces a multitude of decisions: Do I edit my photos by using Photoshop's default features or by using the Artistic or Creative Styles found in the Adobe menu (under Edit > Styles)? Do I get rid of the posterizing or desaturate my photo? Do I export my photos as high quality TIFF files or just save them as jpeg files? Do I convert my digital photos to RAW files? Do I convert my RAW files to jpeg files? Do I use the document settings tool (under File > Document Properties > Settings) or the ruler tool (under View > Rulers) when designing my artboard? Do I use the default resample settings (under File > Edit > Resample), or do I change the resampling quality (under Image > Resize > Resampling Quality)? Do I use the photo crop tool (under Image > Crop), or the trim tool (under Image > Trim > Trim Border)? While the jpeg format is the standard JPEG file format, it limits the editing options and the quality of the final product. For example, here's an example of a photo he edited in Photoshop: The photo was cropped using the crop tool. His artistic style and resolution varied from the resolution of the original photo (5264×3936 pixels). In addition, he resized the resolution to 1728×1320 pixels by choosing the resample settings tool (Image > Resize > Resampling Quality: 12). Finally, he added a white border of 43 pixels around the area he was editing (Image > Crop > Trim > Corners and Edges: 0). In the above photo, the photo editor was resized using the ruler tool (Image > Trim > Trim Border: 3) and the document settings tool (File > Document Properties > Settings). He cropped the image and removed the border by using the crop tool (Image > Crop). While my friend Jason is not a professional photographer, he knows that most of the above photos are cropped and resized in Photoshop. Most of the

Tuesday, November 2, 2010 El Día Nuevo de Bonafé It's been awhile. What's going on with you? Sorry that I haven't been around for awhile. I've been trying to finish my 3rd book. I found myself putting it off because the more I put it off, the worse it got. Well, I guess it's time to get it done. One thing I did recently was go back and re-read some of my favorites by the best writers I know. El Día Nuevo de Bonafé was one of them. It's the story of a young boy called Adememeza, who was only interested in other people's things and was isolated from his parents and the community. One day he received a letter from his father telling him of a beautiful woman he had met and wanted to give him the world. Adememeza's first reaction was shock and disbelief. He said if he were to receive so much from his father, he would ask his father to give him the world. His father called him a liar and told him to leave and not return to the house again. Adememeza decided to leave and never return. As the years passed, he found himself, with difficulty, married off to a woman who would provide for him. A year and a half later, his wife has a son, and is expecting a new child. After the birth, she gave birth to another child she had with another man. The father of the children, when he was told that his wife was pregnant again, cursed the woman and her son and said she would get what she wanted. A year later, Adememeza had a son. The day the boy was born, he cut himself with a knife and took the blood to the man that cursed the mother. The father told him to never return to that house. A decade later, Adememeza was blessed with a son. A short time after, his wife gave birth to her third child. Three years have gone by, and Adememeza and his first son have moved into a large house. His wife is very content, with the two boys she has in the house. A child was born to Adememeza's sister and she gave birth to another boy. As years passed, Adememeza became less respected and his wife lost her happiness.

By Natalia Castro Pat McAfee, the 2012 Libertarian Party nominee for president, has committed to running again in 2016. McAfee would become the first to challenge Donald Trump on the Libertarian Party ticket. Pat McAfee says, "Today, the 2016 election is a three-way race between Donald Trump, Hillary Clinton and Gary Johnson or Jill Stein. I predict a Johnson or Stein ticket will be the only third party on the ballot in every state of the union." Johnson is the only candidate to have raised an impressive $40 million dollars thus far. He has the largest grassroots campaign for any candidate in the history of presidential campaigns. Pat

McAfee said, “When I wrote my manifesto, I said that if it wasn’t for the inspiration of Ron Paul, I would not have run. I truly believe Ron Paul inspired me to run and to continue to speak truth to power. And I believe that Gary Johnson will inspire the nation as the only candidate that can stop Clinton and Trump.” If Johnson does not win, McAfee said, “Gary Johnson’s candidacy will lead to the only true conservative to be nominated for president in 40 years.” Even if the Libertarian Party nominee were conservative, they would still be considered a viable third party. The Libertarian Party has only one point of divergence from the major parties in all of the power metrics on show this campaign, and that is in the area of personal freedom. The remaining points of divergence are largely rhetorical. Pat McAfee is a former broadcast journalist who is also the founder of the Campaign for Liberty. His views on foreign policy and personal freedom are informed by his military service and his stance of not paying for government with other people’s money. McAfee said, “At a time when Obama is expanding executive power, Johnson, as commander in chief, would be a giant step in restoring the balance of power.” McAfee also said, “Johnson has the best chance to create a freedom zone in the Middle East and stabilize the zone. We have to start believing in solutions in order to achieve them.” McAfee also said, “Hillary and Trump don’t inspire me. Johnson does.” Unfortunately, Pat McAfee is wrong. In this election, it’s all
