TreshermanosmiedososÂ .Turbofan

engines typically include a fan assembly which draws in and directs air into the turbofan engine's core engine. The fan assembly is disposed in a fan cowl, which is attached to the front side of the turbofan engine. Engines include multiple fan cowls, for example, to provide access to various components located in the engine core, to provide access to various components located outside of the engine core, and to facilitate removal of the fan from the turbofan engine. A fan bay is typically provided in the fan cowl to allow removal of the fan from the turbofan engine. The fan bay generally includes a plurality of fan bay doors which pivot and are connected to rotating shafts that are attached to and rotate with the fan. The fan bay doors typically open and close to allow access to the fan, and to otherwise isolate the fan from the remainder of the turbofan engine. The fan bay doors of prior fans generally include latches that are manually operated by a mechanic.

The latch is typically disposed on the fan bay doors, and the mechanic must manually engage the latch with the shaft of the rotating fan. These latches are generally easy to open when an engine mechanic or maintenance personnel simply want to remove the fan, and are difficult to close when the mechanic wants to remove the fan for repair. Furthermore, these prior latches are typically mounted to the fan bay doors at a fixed location. These prior latches require that each fan bay door be specifically designed and manufactured with the latch in its fixed location. Thus, even if the fan bay doors are interchangeable, the latches on the fan bay doors may not be interchangeable because the latch is mounted to the fan bay doors at a fixed location 6d1f23a050
