Chin is currently working on a new documentary film, CHUCKED, which will premiere at the Tribeca Film Festival on April 28, 2017. The movie focuses on a climbing accident that claimed the life of an experienced climber. It will highlight the ongoing debate over whether it is safe and legal to use artificial light to climb, or whether such climbers are putting themselves in dangerous situations by choosing to defy the laws of physics. Stefan Glowacz is a Swiss climber, born in Germany in 1974, who debuted in 1993 on the Arête du Dru. In the years that followed, he would spend years climbing in the Alps, and would go on to achieve 13 premier difficulty first ascents. Glowacz currently lives and works in his hometown of Zermatt, Switzerland. He is married to fellow Swiss climber Tina Glowacz, and the couple has a son, Oskar, who is 6 years old. Glowacz has been featured in several documentaries, most notably "Reaching for the Top" (2007) and "Dan Osman's Extinction Machine" (2016). He appears in the 2017 documentary "The Ice" which features his ascents on ice. He is also climbing his way into the history books as he plans to free climb the Nose Route of El Capitan in 2016. Ondra will attempt to free climb El Capitan, considered the hardest climb in the world. If he makes it, he will be the first to free climb El Capitan without the use of bolts or assistance of any kind. If you'd rather watch Hulu with Live TV as a full-featured paid service, you have the option of a commercial-free month-to-month subscription to Hulu's Live TV service. You get a combination of live TV stations from broadcast, cable, and satellite companies, including AMC, USA, and Fox. So, you can get local TV stations in 35 of the 50 U.S. states. However, there's no option to watch local TV in markets like New York, and some other cities.
